from Monday. The prime minister said those who scored at least 9A+, would have a chance to receive sponsorship to pursue their tertiary education in selected fields either at public or private university in the country. He said the Public Service Department posted in his blog NajibRazak.com Sunday. Noting that the overall result if the 2017 SPM examination had showed an improvement with a national average grade of 4.9 compared to 5.05 in 2016, Najib said the programme was just part of the government's initiatives been set aside for the MyBrain Programme which will benefit 10,600 students pursuing Master's or doctorate degree," he said. Student of institutions of higher learning in the country are also receiving Book Voucher Aid of RM250.

The prime minister said the government had spent RM44 billion in sponsorship since 2009 as an investment to develop quality human capital and to ensure that the young generation, who are assets of the country, would be able to show their true potential. He said the social mobility concept would continue being implemented in a bid to develop a fair and inclusive society and country.

"I hope the sponsorship opportunity laid out by the government will not be wasted by our children. Grab this opportunity to create a better future and use it as a platform to give back to the country later," he said. The prime minister said through education, those from the underprivileged families could change their lives for the better. "With the support and help from the government, even a child of a Felda settler, a fisherman or a farmer, can succeed as a professional engineer, accountant, doctor or lawyer," he added.
